THOUSANDS AT STREET PARTY FOR BRITISH QUEEN'S 90TH BIRTHDAY

Ten thousand guests braved rain to take part in a giant street party in front of Buckingham Palace on Sunday to celebrate the official 90th birthday of Queen Elizabeth, Britain's longest-reigning monarch. Hundreds of tables lined the Mall, the grand avenue leading to the palace, for the Patron's Lunch which saw representatives of the more than 600 charities and other organizations of which Elizabeth is patron enjoying food from wicker picnic hampers. Organized by her grandson, Peter Phillips, the lunch was the final event in a weekend of celebrations which has included a church service at London's St Paul's Cathedral and a traditional Trooping the Colour parade of soldiers. REUTERS

ABORTION PROVIDERS, OPPONENTS BRACE FOR HIGH COURT DECISION

The Supreme Court is due to rule by the end of June on whether the Texas law, which imposes strict regulations on abortion doctors and clinic facilities, violates a woman's constitutional right to end her pregnancy as set out in the landmark 1973 Roe v. Wade ruling. The court has not issued a major abortion-related ruling since 2007. The law requires abortion doctors to have "admitting privileges," a type of formal affiliation, at a hospital within 30 miles (48 km) of the clinic. That provision has been implemented. A second provision, not yet in effect, requires clinics to have costly hospital-grade facilities including extensive standards for such attributes as corridor width, room size, floor tiles and the swinging motion of doors. Supporters of the law, passed by a Republican-led legislature and signed by a Republican governor in 2013, say it was enacted to protect women's health. REUTERS

CIA EXPECTS RELEASE OF 9/11 DOCUMENTS TO CLEAR SAUDI ARABIA

CIA chief John Brennan said on Sunday he expects 28 classified pages of a U.S. congressional report into the Sept. 11, 2001 attacks on the United States to be published, absolving Saudi Arabia of any responsibility. "So these 28 pages I believe are going to come out and I think it's good that they come out. People shouldn't take them as evidence of Saudi complicity in the attacks," Brennan said in an interview with Saudi-owned Arabiya TV, according to a transcript provided by the network. The withheld section of the 2002 report is central to a dispute over whether Americans should be able to sue the Saudi government, a key U.S. ally, for damages. REUTERS

LGBT communities reeling in wake of worst mass shooting in US history

On Sunday, 50 people were killed and more than 50 were injured in a massacre outside a gay nightclub.

The nation and LGBT communities were in stunned mourning as the toll from a massacre early Sunday at a gay nightclub in Orlando, Florida, rose to 50 dead and 53 wounded, making it the worst mass shooting in U.S. history.

The gunman, identified as Omar Mir Sed-dique Mateen, 29, was shot and killed in a gun battle with police after shooting his way into the club, Pulse, then going on a killing spree with a semiautomatic rifle and handgun.

Mateen reportedly was born in New York to Afghan parents. In a 911 call, Mateen pledged his allegiance to ISIS, the militant Islamists who have overrun parts of Syria and Iraq, and, according to his father, detests homosexuals.

In a nationally televised speech Sunday afternoon, President Barack Obama labeled the attack an "act of terror and an act of hate."

"We know enough to say this was an act of terror and an act of hate," Obama said. "The FBI is appropriately investigating this as an act of terror. We will go wherever the facts lead us. What is clear is he was a person filled with hatred."

As the names of victims began to be released, gay clubs organized vigils, while police stepped up security at Pride events.

New York

The NYPD issued assurances that it can safeguard the city's Pride events culminating in the annual parade Sunday June 26.

"The NYPD is always in a state of vigilance and our anti-terror capacity will ensure a safe upcoming Pride Week," the department said in a tweet.

The city's gay clubs offered condolences to the victims and their families.

The Stonewall Inn, famously known as the site of the 1969 Stonewall Riots that many consider the birth of the gay rights movement, planned to hold a vigil Sunday night organized by the Stonewall Democrats.

"Our thoughts and prayers are with the victims and families in Orlando. We stand in solidarity and in sadness with our entire LGBT community," the organizers posted.

Other vigils planned Sunday night included a gathering at Diversity Plaza in Jackson Heights with Muslim and LGBT activists to "denounce violence in all its forms and pay their respects to the victims of the Orlando terror attack," and an interfaith vigil at Harlem's Judson Church.

The cast of the Broadway smash "Hamilton" announced it would be performing at the Tony awards Sunday night without prop guns because of the shooting.

New York Mayor Bill de Blasio and Gov. Andrew Cuomo ordered flags in the city and state to be flown at half-staff in remembrance of the 50 victims.

Boston

Security was increased for Sunday's Pride events as news spread of the massacre in Orlando.

"When we woke up and read the news, we were horrified," Pride president Sylvain Bruni said. "The fact that a gay venue was targeted, whether that was specifically the motive or not, goes to our hearts because we are celebrating Pride right now."

Boston Police Commissioner William Evans said earlier Sunday that his department would be providing additional support to LGBT clubs in the city.

"Clearly, this was a hate crime geared at the gay population, and we're going to make sure they are safe," Evans told reporters.

Bruni urged the LGBT community not to be deterred by the shooting.

"We are not afraid," he said. "We should be having a celebration of pride and who we are. The city has our back. The city has stepped up greatly."

David Goulart, 44, of Quincy, said the LGBT community has stood together through challenging times in its history.

"I don't think the gay community has ever been the community to sit back and live in fear," he said. "We're just not that kind of group."

Philadelphia

Philly's Pride Day parade was underway as the full horror of what had occurred in Orlando became apparent. Revelers marched through the Gayborhood and Old City on Sunday, but the day's festivities were tinged with sorrow.

"The hearts of the staff, management and owners of Woody's along with Philly's LGBTQ community are heavy this morning," Woody's wrote on their Facebook page.

Voyeur Nightclub echoed that statement, writing, "We join our LGBTQ family at Woody's in praying for our LGBTQ brothers and sisters in Orlando today."

Philadelphia director of LGBT affairs Nelli Fitzpatrick wrote on Facebook that police were increasing their presence at the Pride parade, but had no reports of any threats of similar violence.

"They have no reason to believe that there are any similar threats for [Sunday's] Philly Pride events," Fitzpatrick wrote in the post. "However, [Philadelphia Police Department] will be taking all necessary precautions for [Sunday's] parade and festival to ensure a safe event for everyone."

A vigil for the victims is planned for 6:30 p.m. Monday outside City Hall.

A coastal storm could put a damper on Father's Day next Sunday GETTY IMAGES

BOLARIS' WEATHER WATCH: COASTAL FOR DAD?

My dad passed away way too soon, and he never had the chance to see me achieve my childhood dream of becoming the CBS TV weatherman. However, I knew he was still there by my side as my very first TV contract was signed on Oct. 7, 1987, four years to the day he passed. Thank you dad for helping me live my dream, I was truly blessed.

You might be asking why have the last 12 years become so special? Well, as any dad would tell you, there is nothing more loving and special than a daddy's love of his daughter. On this coming Father's Day, I will put away all communication in my crazy world (my 12-year-old daughter tells me now to get rid of the phone) and it's nothing but father-daughter time.

Whenever I see her, everything that might be going on in my life or the world melts away. As I write this and see the news and the endless sea of innocent deaths, it only increases my concerns as my beautiful, wonderfully sensitive child starts to venture into this unknown world of horrific violence. I worry so deeply about her, as I know you as parents have the same overwhelming concerns.

Now back to something I can write about without emotion: the weather.

Most of this week is looking fantastic with plenty of sunshine and low humidity that should take us right through midweek.

However, the models are hinting that a slowly evolving coastal storm might start to take shape on Friday near the Mid-Atlantic coast and start to spread rain northward up and along the coast. It appears the biggest threat is from Philly and points south in the early part of the weekend.

One model is also suggesting that the coastal storm may actually get pulled back westward toward the Northeast, meaning a rainstorm for the Northeast coast on Father's Day as far back as the I-95 corridor. This would be very unusual for this time of year, although we still have plenty of time to see if this turns out to be fact or fiction. Confidence level at this early time frame is very low.

Even if it does rain on Dad's Day, in the grand scheme of things, it's really no big deal.

Heavily armed man arrested near LA gay pride festival

Authorities took a suspect into custody in West Hollywood, California, after discovering an arsenal in his car.

A heavily armed man who said he was heading to a gay pride parade in Los Angeles was arrested early on Sunday, Mayor Eric Garcetti said.

Garcetti, speaking at the opening of the LA Pride Festival, expressed his horror at the massacre at a gay nightclub in Orlando, Florida, early Sunday and said it appeared the arrest near Los Angeles was unrelated to the Florida attack, in which 50 people were killed and 53 injured.

Garcetti pledged that the Los Angeles festival would proceed.

He said the arrest occurred after a tip from a suspicious resident. FBI spokeswoman Laura Eimiller said the arrest was made by Santa Monica police and that the FBI was assisting in the investigation.

According to law enforcement officials cited by the Los Angeles Times, a search of the suspect's car turned up several weapons, ammunition and explosive powder was found in the vehicle.

Santa Monica Police declined to comment on the incident and referred calls to the FBI, as did the Los Angeles Sheriff's Department, which also assisted in the arrest. REUTERS

Some US lawmakers press for gun control after Florida shooting

The deadliest mass shooting in U.S. history prompted calls on Sunday by some members of Congress for legislation to tighten control of weapons sales, although there are slim hopes for much change after 50 people were killed at a Florida nightclub.

Democratic Sen. Robert Casey said he would announce a bill on Monday that would ban anyone convicted of a misdemeanor hate crime from owning a firearm.

Under current law, those with felony convictions are prohibited from buying or possessing a gun, but those convicted of misdemeanor hate crimes are not. Casey's bill is called the "Hate Crimes Prevention Act"

He planned to make the announcement in his home state of Pennsylvania, after a meeting with members of Pittsburgh's lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender community.

Lawmakers, including some Republicans, have pressed for stricter gun laws after earlier mass shootings, but the measures have failed to gain enough support to become law. Backed by the powerful gun industry lobby, many members of Congress strongly resist any restrictions on weapons sales, saying they threaten Americans' constitutional rights.

Other Democratic lawmakers also called for Congress to act after Sunday's attack in Orlando, some in very strong terms.

Democratic Sen. Chris Murphy said the "epidemic" of gun violence would continue if Congress does not act and that lawmakers shared responsibility. REUTERS

PEDAL TO THE METAL

Both major parties are rapidly turning to the general election now and hoping to unify their bases. But the real race is for the center — all those independents who will decide the vote and who pretty strongly dislike the presumptive nominees. So load up, gas up and release the parking brake. Here are my three things to watch this week in politics.

1. TRUMP'S TRUMPET

Up until now it has all been skirmishing; this week Donald Trump will floor it in his attacks on Hillary Clinton. In a widely anticipated speech, Trump is expected to rip her character, her decision making, and her trustworthiness — laying out what could be the battle plan for the Republicans all the way to November. Watch to see if he uses a teleprompter. Without one he can be fiery, but if he sticks to a script that could be a sign of something GOPers have prayed for and Dems fear — a more disciplined and potentially potent candidate.

2. WORKING IT

Clinton has issues in the Rust Belt where her stance on trade deals has alienated some working folks. Trump has responded by saying he'll target Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan and Wisconsin. That may explain why she's heading to that part of the country this week, hoping to shore up support. A little good news for her camp: The largest labor union, the AFL-CIO, is expected to endorse her this week. May not help, but certainly

3. ON THE ROAD AGAIN

The polls say plenty of Americans are not big fans of President Obama's home game, but on the road he is a two-time champion. We'll find out if he still has the power to turbocharge a campaign when he hits the trail to help Clinton. What to watch? Presidents have a way of overshadowing the polls they are trying to help, and if Clinton feels too much shadow they could wind up working mostly separate stages until the fall.

Trump quickly ties Florida shootings to Islamists

GOP candidate tweeted that the massacre had proved that he was "right on radical Islamic terrorism."

In the wake of the deadliest shooting in U.S. history, Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump wasted little time suggesting the attack was tied to Islamist militants, while his Democratic rival, Hillary Clinton, initially did not make that connection.

As President Barack Obama on Sunday addressed the nation about the incident that killed 50 people and wounded 53 at a gay nightclub in Orlando, Florida, Trump assailed him for his longstanding refusal to refer to Islamic State and other extremist groups as in part representing the religion of Islam.

"Is President Obama going to finally mention the words radical Islamic terrorism?" Trump tweeted as the president was speaking. "If he doesn't he should immediately resign in disgrace."

Trump in a later tweet claimed the gunman shouted "Allah hu Akbar!" during the attack. U.S. officials as yet have not provided any information that such an incident occurred.

A gunman armed with an assault rifle attacked the Pulse nightclub at about 2 a.m. Sunday, ending in the worst mass shooting in U.S. history.

In his remarks at the White House, Obama said the investigation into the shootings was ongoing and declined to speculate on the motives of the shooter.

"We've reached no definitive judgment on the precise motivations of the killer," Obama said. "The FBI is appropriately investigating this as an act of terrorism."

Similarly, Clinton, in a statement, called the attack an "act of terror" but did not speculate as to the ideology of the gunman, identified by authorities as Florida resident Omar Mateen.

"Law enforcement and intelligence agencies are hard at work, and we will learn more in the hours and days ahead," said Clinton, the likely Democratic presidential nominee.

During the campaign for the Nov. 8 presidential election, Trump has proposed a temporary ban on Muslims entering the United States as a means to combat the threat of militant attacks.

"Appreciate the congrats for being right on radical Islamic terrorism, I don't want congrats, I want toughness & vigilance," Trump tweeted. "We must be smart."

U.S. Rep. Adam Schiff, a Democrat from California and a top member of a congressional intelligence committee, said in a statement that according to local law enforcement, the shooter had declared his allegiance to Islamic State, which "indicates an ISIS-inspired act of terrorism."

BRIEF

Sanders says he will meet with Hillary Clinton on Tuesday

Bernie Sanders said he will meet with his rival Hillary Clinton on Tuesday to press her to embrace his progressive agenda, saying he wants to know what she will stand for if she becomes president.

Speaking on ABC's "This Week" program Sunday, Sanders did not concede he had lost the Democratic presidential nomination to Clinton, who is leading in Democratic primaries and is the party's presumed nominee.

Sanders said he and Clinton would discuss "if she wins, what kind of administration she will have."

"What I need to see [is] a commitment that there will be progressive taxation," he said, saying corporations and billionaires should pay higher tax rates.

He repeated his stance that he would do "everything I can" to ensure Donald Trump, the presumptive Republican nominee, would not become president.

Sanders said he wanted to see Clinton embrace his view that health care should be a universal right in America and public universities should offer education free. REUTERS

Don't talk smack about Adele

Say what you will about Adele, but it's hard to deny the "Hello" singer doesn't have some serious vocal chops. Famed producer Tony Visconti, though, doesn't quite see it that way.

"You turn the radio on and it's fluff, you are listening to 90 percent computerized voices," the producer, best known for his work with David Bowie, told the British Daily Star. "We know Adele has a great voice, but it's even questionable if that is actually her voice or how much has been manipulated. We don't know."

Well, Adele certainly seems to have an idea, telling her audience at a recent concert that "some dickhead tried to say that my voice was not me on record."

"Dude," she concludes. "Suck my d—."

You might have a hard time hearing the remarks over the screams of some thoroughly needy fans in the front row, but at least one video of the incident was posted to YouTube this weekend.

Chris Brown back at it with the law

Chris Brown was "high as a kite" when he was pulled over for riding a dirt bike without plates in Amsterdam's Red Light District on Friday, according to TMZ.

But luckily for the pop star, he was only asked to follow officers to the station and pay a fine for the unregistered vehicle.

It's unclear whether Brown's celebrity played a role in his treatment, though the responding officers don't seem to recognize the singer.

Later, the singer posted a few videos on his Instagram from inside the police station.

The singer told fans he "just bought the bikes" and "forgot about the license plate."

He added that the police were "really nice about it," noting, "I really like the police out here—cool as s—, for real."

Apparently! According to TMZ, Brown "clearly could have been busted for DUI" as he and his buddies starting riding only minutes after enjoying some marijuana in one of the city's famed coffee shops.

'The Voice' remembers slain contestant

Christina Grimmie, a rising star who competed on NBC's "The Voice" was fatally shot while signing autographs Friday in Orlando, Florida.

Her "Voice" family has come out, expressing condolences and sharing memories of Grimmie, who was 22 when she died.

Adam Levine, a "Voice" judge who served as Grimmie's coach on the sixth season, said he and his wife were "devastated."

"Behati and I are absolutely devastated and heartbroken by Christina Grimmie's death. Our hearts go out to her family," he wrote in his post.

Christina Aguilera, also a "Voice" judge, praised Grimmie as a "true fighter."

"So sad passing of [Grimmie]. Beautiful family & true #Fighter. My heart goes out to her family, friends & fans. xo," Aguilera wrote on Twitter.

Blake Shelton also paid tribute to the star, writing Saturday, "I'm stunned and disgusted and heartbroken that we lost that sweet little girl... Keeping @TheRealGrimmie family in my heart and mind."

Worlds collide at Daybreaker when yoga, live music and a beach party-inspired rave take over the Foundation Room on Tuesday morning. The dynamic blend of wellness, energy and fun begins at 6 a.m. for a three-hour wake-up call you definitely won't snooze through.

Conceived as a way to begin the day with vitality and intention, Daybreaker has been hosting health-driven dance parties since 2013 when New York-based founders, Radha Agrawal and Matthew Brimer, envisioned a sober, line-free version of the city's nightclub scene. What began as a small experiment has expanded into a thriving global community with events in New York, San Francisco, D.C., Miami, Toronto, Paris and London.

Boston-based yogi Izzy VanHall will lead next week's beach-themed session and with her down-to-earth attitude and extensive training, she's excited to return to Daybreaker for the third time.

"I didn't totally know what to expect," she says of her first time teaching for the event. "I didn't know how many people would show up for yoga at 6 a.m." But despite the early wake-up call, tickets still sold out.

She expects that the same will happen this year, especially because the yoga session is open to all abilities. "I teach as though there are all levels in the room," VanHall adds. "Anyone can get something out of it."

After a meditative hour on the mats, the event transforms into an early morning rave experience, encouraging guests to sweat on the dance floor while VanHall and her partner Ray Borg will perform acro-yoga. DJ Jaminic and Keytar Bear will provide the tunes.

"The dance is wild. Last time I had these paint markers and I just painted on a bunch of people," VanHall says. "That was my chance to connect with people one-on-one. We may only have that one small connection, but those are the really special moments for me."

Smoothies and other beachy snacks will be served before clients head off to work — because it's Tuesday, after all — and hopefully, carrying the energy and good vibes from their morning dance party throughout the day.

"When I think about Daybreaker, I want people to leave feeling like anything is possible," says VanHall. "Everyone there is looking to find a sense of freedom."

Lizzy Caplan: Yes, women are funny

The "Now You See Me 2" star is sick of people grumbling about female-driven comedies.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Lizzy Caplan hasn't done many blockbusters. "Cloverfield" aside, it's mostly TV or comedies: "Party Down," "Masters of Sex," "Bachelorette" and "Mean Girls." With "Now You See Me 2" she takes a detour into a splashy globe-trotting thriller, playing a new addition to the "Four Horseman," the Robin Hood magicians played by Jesse Eisenberg, Dave Franco and Woody Harrelson. And yet Caplan says it felt like making one of those raucous comedies, everyone doing their best to crack each other up. The actress, 33, talks about magic tricks and that teeth-grindingly annoying question: Are women funny?

Did you pick up any magic tricks doing this? I did learn a few parlor tricks. Unfortunately when I bust them out in front of my friends they totally dismiss them. "Oh, you did a magic movie, you think you can do magic." Even when I pull off the trick perfectly, they don't buy it. In this movie, your character spends a good chunk of the movie mocking the casual sexism of the other characters — like when they ask if you'll be OK riding a motorcycle but don't ask, say, Woody Harrelson. Exactly. And a lot of that stuff we just added as we were going along. I felt really strongly — since she's the only female Horseman — about not making her purely eye candy or, even worse, a straight man to the guy's zany antics. I wanted her to be annoying, really. They let me be overeager and kind of irritating. And she's kind of aggressive towards [romancing] Dave Franco's character, which you don't see too often.

You get some weird asides and even get to fake-cut your arm with an electric knife. [Director] Jon Chu would let me go and improvise and say whatever I wanted in later takes. We called it "milk-ing it." He'd call out, "Milk it!" and pretend to milk a cat or something. I could go off and say all kinds of stupid s—, just to make my co-stars laugh. But I thought they'd cut that out, because it was too much and they would try to jam the character into a more familiar box. But they really left a fair amount of it in. In a way I felt more comedic freedom on this than on a lot of comedies.

Of course, we still have to have that discussion about whether women are funny or not.

I know, ugh, god. Yes, I think it's changing, but it's changing at such a snail's pace that it's hard not to be consistently disappointed by it. "Bridesmaids," for example, worked great. So that restarted the conversation — "women being funny," which makes me want to bash my head into the wall. And then "Trainwreck" did really well. But still, it feels if "Ghostbusters" doesn't do well then they're not going to have female-driven comedies for awhile again. It's this never-ending quest to prove that women can be funny. It's so exhausting.

And then we get men's rights advocate dudes posting videos about how they're not going to see "Ghostbusters," only because the trailer wasn't funny. Trailers are bad sometimes! And "Ghostbusters" — fingers crossed — will be good. But I feel like all the elements are in place: Paul Feig directing, all those girls are amazingly hilarious. How is that not going to be funny?

Hustlers — you know, those cutthroat, scheming, do-what-you-gotta-do-for-a-buck types — historically don't have the best reputation. But now that just over a third of U.S. workers are part of the "hustle economy," the word is being reclaimed by freelancers, creative types and innovative opportunity seekers who don't just find niches, but create them.

You know: hustlers. Editor, producer and creator of the popular blog "I Love Charts" Jason Oberholtzer gathered a bunch of hustlers (writers, producers, filmmakers, comedians, and startup founders) to pen essays about the grind in "The Hustle Economy: Transforming Your Creativity into a Career." Drawing from the collection, Oberholtzer busts a few myths about hustling for a living.

Myth No. 1: "Making it" means you earn a living being creative

Most hustlers take on a range of gigs to pay the bills. They may never subsist solely on earnings from their creative endeavor, which is why the bar for "making it," says Oberholtzer, "should be set lower in terms of finance, but also in terms of output. What I mean by that is, to call yourself a creative person, — say, to call yourself a musician — you need to earn 100 percent of your money doing creative things that you need to be doing. That's the myth," he says. The truth? Many composers who've made it also teach or develop music theory textbooks, among other pursuits.

Myth No. 2: Talent equals success

Drive and talent are prerequisites for hustling success — but not guarantees. Privilege plays a huge role: "If you have a day job, and you have to pay off your student loans, then you're going to have to do a lot of your own work to provide yourself with opportunities," says Oberholtzer. But a financial leg up is only part of it, says Oberholtzer. "Privilege is also just having access to intelligent voices who can help you navigate the challenges," he says. In other words, being part of an artistic community is a form of privilege, too.

Myth No. 3: If you're not successful, it's because you're not trying hard enough

Because hustlers are proactive doers, it's easy for them to internalize external road bumps as personal failings, says Oberholtzer: "We stew in that too much because as self-sufficient people, we are used to being able to solve our own problems." The solution? Cut yourself some slack. "Treat yourself better, treat your body better, give yourself a break. Understand if your creative relationships are helping you or not helping you."

Myth No. 4: The hustle is risky and unstable

Oh, the irony. Besides creatives, the hustle economy comprises people who had big dreams of cubicle dwelling "stability," but ended up making due. So which path is really riskier?

"Whenever anyone asks, 'Don't you want the security of a full-time job? Aren't you afraid? How are you doing that thing you do?' Kindly remind them of how fickle the business world is, how disrupted — to borrow a terrible tech term — most industries are at this point," Oberholtzer says. "And [given] the dangers of being beholden to any one particular employer — the only way to have a job security is to be above the success or failure of any given project, specifically, any given company."

Before going on maternity leave, ask for a performance review. ISTOCK

How to advance your career when you're pregnant

Should you bring up your pregnancy during a job interview?

EMILY LAURENCE
@EmLaurence
letters@metro.us

Telling your friends you're pregnant is definitely something to look forward to. But telling your boss is typically a bit more anxiety-inducing.

Allyson Downey, author of "Here's the Plan: Your Practical, Tactical Guide to Advancing Your Career During Pregnancy and Parenthood" was working on Wall Street when she found out she was pregnant. Her desire to have a family didn't detour her career success — even in a predominantly male industry.

Through her own experience, and in interviews with other successful working parents, Downey shares advice for advancing your career during pregnancy and parenting. Here are a few of her tips for getting ahead while pregnant.

Get your exemplary performance written down

In her book, Downey advises creating a paper trail that highlights all the good work you've done and continue to do. If you don't have a copy of your most recent performance review, request one from human resources. Before you tell your boss you're pregnant, ask for another performance review, saying you are someone who likes a lot of feedback and you want to make sure you are on track to accomplishing your goals and meeting the company's objectives. Also, collect any analytical data that reflect what you have done for your company. All of these documents are good to keep in case you ever feel your job is in jeopardy.

Build a network before you go on maternity leave

Downey points out that once you have a baby, you will have zero time for networking events, so spend your pregnancy connecting yourself to people within your field at other workplaces. You'll be able to keep in touch with them digitally later. Plus, it will help you build a good list of backup employers.

Present a plan to your boss covering all your bases

You may think it will make your colleagues appreciate you more to struggle in your absence and have dozens of questions they wish they could ask you, but Downey says showing your boss how everything you do will continue to get done in your absence shows a commitment to your workplace. Present a plan to your boss, including what you'll pick up with when you get back to the office. Everyone in the office will thank you.

Interviewing while pregnant

"Here's the Plan" also addresses the complicated situation of applying for jobs while pregnant. When it comes to when to tell your potential employer, Downey generally advises not mentioning it during an interview. While there are exceptions, like if the team is very small, she advises keeping the interview about why you are perfect for your job, not your personal life — and that includes pregnancy.

Muhammad Ali was notoriously outspoken, while Gordie Howe was as nonpolitical as it gets. GETTY IMAGES

BURKE: KEEP POLITICS OUT OF SPORTS

Two of the greatest athletes in the history of North American sports died a week apart. Boxing legend Muhammad Ali and hockey superduper-star Gordie Howe are sadly no longer with us.

The two were entirely different when it came to openly discussing politics. Ali became the most recognizable face in the world for a time period mostly because of his dislike for the way America was. He refused to go to Vietnam and was convicted of draft evasion. He was banned from boxing because of it, losing over three years of his prime. He owned one of the most famous quotes from that time period: "No Viet Cong ever called me n—."

Ali was the most outspoken athlete of all-time when it came to politics. Gordie Howe? Not quite. I Googled "Gordie Howe Democrat," "Gordie Howe Republican," and "Gordie Howe politics" and came away clueless about his political stance.

When Ali died, we got a week's worth of media blowhards begging for a current megastar athlete to openly discuss politics the way Ali did.

"LeBron, how do we defeat

ISIS?"

"Aaron Rodgers, what's your take on Trump and his plans to build a wall?"

"Cam Newton, are you 'Ready for Hillary'?"

Of course, the people who are calling for these famous athletes to 'finally speak up' are the same ones who would immediately slam Tom Brady if he campaigned alongside his buddy Trump, and they're the same ones who would roll their eyes if Stephen Curry rambled on for 30 minutes about gun control in an NBA Finals pre-game press conference.

We live in an era where if you post a political message on Facebook or Twitter, you had best be prepared to spend an hour of your time replying to the pissed off people who disagree with you. Yeah, the debate is fine. It's great that we live in a country in which we are allowed to debate. But, seriously, what is in it for a major pro athlete in 2016 to join this debate?

More important, what is in it for us — in the real world — for a major athlete to speak up regarding real life issues in 2016?

Guys like LeBron do not have a clue what the real world is like in 2016, so why in the world should we pressure him to speak about it? He's a guy who was on the cover of Sports Illustrated when he was 17 years old, and he's a guy who hasn't heard the word "no" since around 1992. This is not his fault, of course. It's just the way it's been in this country for some time.

Just know that growing up in the 1980s and '90s like LeBron did is far different from growing up in the 1940s and '50s like Ali did. Ali dealt with real-life issues every single day. LeBron has been shielded from real-life issues for decades now.

Now, I despise the idea of censorship, and I agree that we live in a country right now that has far too much censorship. But I'm absolutely fine with today's pro athlete shutting his or her mouth and just "sticking to sports."

We have far too much misinformation in this country as it is. We really don't need rich pro athletes to add to the political drivel.

The saga continues ...

Will sparks fly once again in Game 5 as the Golden State Warriors head home to Oakland looking to clinch their second straight NBA title against the Cleveland Cavaliers? Tip off is tonight at 9 on ABC. GETTY IMAGES

Patriots players realistic about what June OTAs mean

Big names have been missing from the New England practices.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

With the Patriots' mandatory mini-camp in the books, we can finally put our finger on the pulse of this year's team and make some pretty educated predictions on where they're headed, right?

Wrong.

As much as some of us football geeks would love to dissect every play in OTAs and mini-camp with the hope that it will translate into what to expect in Week 6 of the regular season, that just isn't what these offseason programs are intended for.

And don't expect Bill Belichick to put much stock into the whole product at this point.

"It's really a teaching camp," Belichick said. "We have OTAs next week too."

Numerous integral players on offense like Rob Gronkowski, Julian Edelman, Danny Amendola, Dion Lewis, and LeGarrette Blount didn't even suit up for the mini-camp workouts. But that isn't to say the time spent at these practices isn't important. While the actual performance between the whistle is nowhere near full throttle (the players don't even wear pads), it's what goes on before and after that really matters. It's players getting acclimated to their coaches, teammates, and playbook so when things pick up in training camp and then preseason, there's at least something to build off of.

It's nice that rookie wideout Malcolm Mitchell reportedly made a great one-handed catch on Thursday, but even he knew not to focus on that, telling reporters he was thinking more about what his job was on the next play.

"I think for me right now it's coming in every day learning," Mitchell said. "And I trust how the coaches are installing the plays, I trust the amount of plays they're putting in for us to learn. And after that it's not really up to them anymore. It's our responsibility to make sure we stay up an extra hour, to wake up an extra hour early to make sure we know everything coming in. I think once you get your priorities straight in that area you'll come in and kind of know what you're doing. Still have a lot of room to grow and a lot to learn."

Devin McCourty is going through his seventh OTA/mini-camp with the Patriots and is well aware that the goals in June are much different than in the late summer into fall.

"I don't even know what looking good in June means. This is not really football in a sense," McCourty said. "We have a ton of guys that are very physical. They're hitters. They're guys that make a living off being physical and punishing guys. They don't get to do that out here."

That's true — but a defense filled with returning and new veterans — along with young players — does get some valuable time together.

"We're just trying to come together as a group, learn the playbook together and just working together as a whole defense and progressing all together," Terrance Knighton said.

Aries Get moving. Too much pondering and not enough action will leave you standing in the same place. Make a move based on what your intuition tells you.

Taurus Weigh what's being offered carefully. An empty promise will take up valuable time. Invest in your skills, talents and innovative ideas, and work on your own projects.

Gemini Do whatever you can to improve your surroundings. You don't have to spend money to have fun or win approval from others. You have more to offer people than mere cash.

Cancer Bide your time. Don't get emotional when dealing with partnership matters. Keeping a clear head will be necessary if you want your ideas to be considered.

Leo Talk to people who can help you make your dreams come true. A change in the way you present what you have to offer will pay off. Romance is encouraged.

Virgo Proceed with caution. You will face opposition if you are too vocal regarding your intentions. Get everything up and running before you share your plans.

Libra Make plans and follow through with them. Your ability to formulate an idea and put it into play will help you gain confidence and the support you need to succeed.

Scorpio You need to make your plans financially feasible. It's OK to dream, but efficiency and expense will be factors if you aren't realistic. Build slowly.

Sagittarius You should beef up your resume to fit the current economic trends, but be honest about what you can offer an employer. Opportunity will be yours, so you'd better be prepared.

Capricorn Don't give in to someone in order to keep the peace. Someone using emotional tactics is best treated firmly if you want to come out on top. Ask questions.

Aquarius Don't play games. Make up your mind and stick to your plan. You'll gain respect and impress a loved one if you are straightforward about what you want.

Pisces Demands that are difficult to meet will be made. You should put more money and effort into an investment that will help you get ahead. Call in favors if it will help you. EUGENIA LAST
